

The Origin Of The Idea Of Crusade

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

Alone we purchase heavenly bliss :
For this a man must waste his gold,
And pass the boundless seas for this.
Now I maintain 'tis far more sage,
In peace to hold one's heritage ;
And there that Paradise obtain,
For which thou needs wilt cross the main.

CRUSADER.

Nay, now thy speech so lewdly sounds,
I scarce may sober answer deign
Thou ween'st, forsooth, with hawks and hounds
To save thy soul, sans fleshy pain
How much of martyrs' blood has flow'd
To win those seats of heaven's abode ?
How many, this world's joys foregone,
And buried quick, in cloister's moan ?

NON-CRUSADER.

Sire, by my fay, thou preachest well !
Thy words are brave ; 'twere best thou go
To yon sequester'd silent cell,
And teach its lordly abbot so !
Those fattening deans would gladly hear ;
Those prelates needs must lend an ear ,
Such men, be sure, heaven's laws fulfil,
Devoted to their Maker's will !
On these his plenteous gifts he showers,
While we are told his wars to wage !
Their rents flow in, they dwell in bowers,
Nor, slumbering, note the tempest's rage.
Good faith, Sir, if the road to heaven,
Be made so passing smooth and even,
The priest who changeth, wit must lack,
He ne'er shall find a readier track.
